WISE WORDS OF THE WEEK:

Every five years our American sophistication gets higher and higher. I need this to be happy, and then I need that to be happy, and this no longer makes me happy. Once I get on that course, I can never go back; whereas, the saints need less and less to make them happy. Their contentment is from within. They're not expecting the future to be any different than it is right now; because how one does anything is how one does everything.
